This page provides information dedicated to helping customers, contractors and vendors conduct business transactions with BPA, to include: buying and selling products or services, submitting invoices, forms, paying BPA, and BPA's Business Code of Conduct for Contract Personnel.

Environmental Services works closely with numerous Federal and State agencies, Tribes, landowners, and the public to protect and recover endangered species, protect and preserve our cultural resources, and reduce impacts to wetlands, air, water, and the human environment.

BPA supports over 15,000 miles of transmission lines as well as additional fish and wildlife habitat across Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and California. This section provides commonly requested information.

BPA is self-financing, meaning it does not depend on annual appropriations from Congress to fund its operations. Rather, BPA's operations are funded by revenues from power and transmission customers.
