Cost savings new delhi

Welcome to Delhi, India's capital and a bustling hub of education, industry, and culture. If you're planning to move here, it's important to understand the cost of living, which varies depending on the area you choose to live in. While some parts of Delhi, like Central and South Delhi, may be costlier, suburban areas are more affordable.

In this guide, we'll explore the cost of living in Delhi and provide you with tips to help you save money. We'll also answer your questions and provide the information you need to make a smooth transition to your new home in Delhi.

The cost of living in Delhi depends on factors such as family size and lifestyle. Groceries and utilities for a single person are cheaper than for a family while dining out and shopping habits affect overall costs. Education, infrastructure, and healthcare are good, but they can be expensive.

Rent for a one-bedroom apartment ranges from Rs. 10,050 to Rs. 18,100, while a two-bedroom one can be Rs. 30,050 to Rs. 50,100. Monthly expenses include electricity, Wi-Fi, and groceries, starting at Rs. 850. Transport and meals add to the cost, with a monthly bus pass of around Rs. 1,050 and daily meals for two starting at Rs. 600.

The cost of real estate in Delhi varies significantly across different localities. Affordable properties, priced up to Rs. 40 Lakh, are available in areas like Uttam Nagar and Dwarka, with average prices per square foot ranging from Rs. 11,674 to Rs. 21,835.

For mid-range properties, such as those in Paschim Vihar, prices can go up to Rs. 23,400 per square foot. Luxury properties exceeding Rs. 3 Crore are found in upscale areas like Greater Kailash 1 and Safdarjung Enclave, with average prices per square foot reaching Rs. 64,944.

In contrast, posh areas such as Greater Kailash and Shanti Niketan command higher rents, ranging from Rs. 18,050 to Rs. 1,00,000 monthly. The rent can go even higher in areas like Hauz Khas and Safdarjung.
