Eco worthy 12v 280ah lifepo4

I have had this battery over a month now. Full time living in a caravan while I build my house. And the battery is not up to what is stated. The power stated roughly 3400kwh but after using a 12v tv and a diesel heater for an evening the battery life has depleted to nearly half. I dont know if this battery I'd a faulty one. I sometimes play a game of an evening and the gaming system only uses 320kw am hour so technically should run for 10 hours but I besrly get an 2 hours and I have to turn it off as getting very low. Sometimes it's not always food to buy cheap.

I placed the order and received it a few days ago, on time and in good condition. Battery has taken a charge and seems to function fine. No testing done as far as whether it meets advertised parameters, so we'll see.

I bought 2 of the eco worthy 280ah batterys last spring for my Lance 2285 trailer. They were installed under the bed with a 3500W inverter we run any thing we want including the air conditioner at night. Never had less than 30% after a 4 night stay. For icing on the cake I just got 1 more. My question for eco worthy is the new battery is a couple inches shorter than the other 2 I bought last spring (all non bluetooth models) is the battery any different besides the case size? I am assuming it will be fine in parelell with my other slightly older 2?

Have not put the battery through much of a test as of yet. I would say that they should be more accurate with the dimensions stated on the website. Found one set of measurements on their website and another set of measurements on Amazon. Luckily the battery fit where it needed to be placed.
