

Electric vehicles evs denmark

The latest EV Index from HERE Technologies and SBD Automotive shows Denmark as the new leader in Europe in the introduction and support of electric vehicles. Every year since 2020, the index has determined who are the pioneers and laggards in e-mobility in Europe.

The share of passenger cars in Denmark that are fully electric is now over ten percent for the first time, according to a calculation from the car importers' trade association, Mobility Denmark, shows that

He is convinced that electric car sales will only gain even more momentum in the coming years, and that proposed zero-emission zones in Danish cities from the beginning of 2025 will push electric uptake further.

There are currently 34,318 Tesla Model Ys on Danish roads, closely followed by Tesla's Model 3, of which 33,396 are registered. This is followed by Volkswagen's ID. 4 and Skoda Enyaq iV.

Several train companies affected by the signal failure in Jutland have announced plans to reduce service for the rest of the weekend. According to Banedanmark, reports Ritzau, Nordjyske Jernbaner, Midtjyske Jernbaner, and GoCollective will operate with hourly trains through Sunday, meaning that only one train per hour will run on the affected routes.

These disruptions impact key connections, including trains from Aarhus to Struer, Aarhus to Viborg, and Esbjerg to Varde. The signal issue caused major disruptions to train traffic across much of Jutland on Thursday, and as of Friday morning, Banedanmark has not yet determined the cause of the failure.

Euroinvestor.dk reports that coffee prices have hit their highest point since 1972, as the cost of arabica beans continues to rise. A futures contract for one pound of coffee (about 0.45 kg) now costs $3.20, or around 22 DKK. This increase will soon be felt by consumers at stores. Claus Bertelsen, CEO of Peter Larsen Kaffe, [...]

For the first time since 2017, the number of children living in poverty in Denmark has increased, according to a report by the Economic Council of the Labour Movement (AE). In 2023, 2,300 more children were living in families below the poverty line compared to the previous year, reversing a steady downward trend. This rise in [...]

Danish Music Awards were held on Thursday evening. The award for Danish live act of the year went to Denmark's perhaps biggest band at the moment, The Minds of 99. As the first music act at all - including international ones - Minds of 99 played three sold-out concerts in three days in Parken, Copenhagen, in [...]

The workplace accident at the biogas plant in Flemløse on Funen has now claimed a third life, as emergency services discovered the body of the missing worker on Thursday evening. The victim, a 53-year-old Belgian citizen, was located at approximately 7 p.m., Funen Police confirmed in a press release. This follows the deaths of two Romanian [...]

TDC, Denmark's largest telecommunications provider, faced widespread service disruptions, leaving thousands of customers unable to make calls, including to emergency services at 112. The issue appeared to stem from a software update implemented on Wednesday, which went awry, according to TDC Communications Manager Lasse Bjerre Sørensen. While the exact cause is still under investigation, Sørensen assured TV2 that the company is reviewing its procedures to prevent similar incidents in the future.

The outage had significant consequences. Funen Police deployed all available patrol cars to the streets, advising residents to approach officers directly if unable to reach police by phone. Officials recommended that people use phones from providers other than TDC or remove their SIM cards to call 112, as phones can connect to emergency services without a SIM card.
