

Fake energizer batteries

Why have an mp3 player when you have phone. It depends on where you'll be travelling and how. Battery life on your phone might be more important to preserve than running it down with music. Likewise, do you really want to have your phone out on display everywhere? I had one, it didn't survive Africa. The battery went. I have met 5 people in one sitting who lost all manner of content in high humidity conditions. One long bus trip can use up all your battery.

Turkish FoodI was in Istanbul during Ramadan, so day time food was scarce aside from tourist restaurants. But at night it was 3 Euro kebabs, pancakes, baked potatoes and corn/maize dishes galore. Indeed the Turkish Doner Kebab seems rarer here than in Spain, but still good for the penny pinchers. Breads in Turkey are stunningly good. I am not a sweet tooth, so Turkish Delight did little. However Baklava won me over, never a better sweet have I tasted.

From the shadows of a challenging upbringing, where the concept of "home" felt more like an abstract idea than a place of safety or comfort, I began a quest to find a place that resonates with the simple concept of home. Driven by an insatiable desire for freedom, community, and helping others, I embarked on a journey fueled by hard work, saving every penny, surviving against the odds, and harboring dreams that reached far beyond the confines of my beginnings.

This search for home is not just an abstract wish for belonging but a critical pursuit of stability, security, and a foundation upon which to build a life. Without it, I'm walking a tightrope without a safety net, where the fear of falling looms large with every step. My journey, chronicled in my article "The Definition of Home" is a heartfelt exploration of the profound impact the absence of home has on one's spirit and the relentless quest to find that one place where I can finally say, with a sigh of relief and a heart full of peace, "I am home."

For each country I visit, there is a mini guide with several unique sections pertaining to this journey. Over the years, this website has become a vast travel resource that helps many people. Check out the travel resources section for things from up-to-date travel guides to in-depth features.

David Ways began an epic journey in 2005 to travel the world in search of home. He traveled solo overland from Sintra in Portugal across Europe into Iran, Pakistan, India, and Nepal where he discovered the feeling of home before exploring the rest of South East Asia.

For over 17years, David has created what is today the world's number one online travel guide to Nepal (he's working on a few other countries as well). He's created and continues to publish innovative live interactive digital guidebooks to Nepal which have changed the way many people travel the country.
