However, foreign businesses may still interact with Vatican City by providing specialized services or products. Procurement: Vatican City often procures goods and services from Italian firms or other foreign companies, particularly for construction

The economy of Vatican City is mainly supported financially by the sale of stamps, coins, medals, and tourist mementos as well as fees for admission to museums and publication sales. Vatican City employed 4,822 people in 2016.

The main economic activity of Vatican City centers on tourism. Although it does not have an official tourism effort, the city-state earns revenues through museum admissions, guided tours, and sales of highly sought-after stamps, coins, mementos, and publications.

Before starting the export process, identify the specific goods you intend to export. Vatican City has a very small population (around 800 residents), and its demand for imports is limited, mainly focusing on essential goods, religious items, and specialty products for the Vatican Museums and visitors.

Vatican City does not have its own customs system and relies on Italian customs regulations for importing goods. Since Vatican City is landlocked by Italy, you will have to comply with EU and Italian import regulations.

When exporting to Vatican City, you will need to provide standard export documentation, similar to exports to other EU countries. These documents must be submitted to Italian customs authorities, who will handle the clearance process.

Since Vatican City is entirely surrounded by Italy, all goods must be shipped via Italian ports or airports. Goods will enter Rome and then be transported to Vatican City. Common shipping methods include:

Since Vatican City does not have its own customs office, your goods will be cleared by Italian customs upon entry into Italy. The goods will then be transported into Vatican City without further customs checks.

Once your goods clear Italian customs, you will need to arrange for their delivery to Vatican City. The delivery process is straightforward, as the Vatican is a small area within Rome, and most goods are delivered directly to the Vatican's administrative offices or relevant institutions (e.g., Vatican Museums, Vatican Gift Shops).

Vatican City, the smallest independent state in the world, relies heavily on imports for its daily operations, given its limited domestic production capabilities. While Vatican City itself does not have its own customs office, all goods imported into the Vatican must pass through Italian customs. The process involves complying with both Italian and European Union (EU) import regulations, as Vatican City is entirely surrounded by Italy.

Before initiating the import process, identify the type of goods you plan to import into Vatican City. The Vatican's import needs are limited, focusing primarily on goods for religious purposes, administrative use, daily necessities, and items for the Vatican Museums or gift shops.
